WHY THE PRACTICE WAS ABOLISHED. -In palmy days of the gentle craft, the printer was allowed to wear a sword. But there was such terrible slaughter wrought by the long-suffering typos upon the writers of illegible manuscripts in those days, that it was finally found necessary to interdict writing for the press altogether, or deprive the man of types of his redoubtable weapon. The first alternative was found of impossible execution; men would write though never so blindly. The printers were there-fore disarmed; and though it was conclusively shown that the number of deaths next year was less by several thousand in each of the large cities alone, yet it was also developed that the followers of the art preservative had acquired a habit of profanity quite grievous to hear.—[Boston Transcript.

A Mysterious Estate.-For more than a year Secretary Schurz has been receiving letters from persons inquiring for informa-tion concerning a certain Becker estate, supposed to be situated in Philadelphia and to be waiting for heirs to turn up. newspapaper article which started the story gave an account of an alleged meeting of some of the Becker heirs, in which it was stated that a letter had been received from Secretary Schurz saying that papers containing valuable information about the estate had been discovered at the Interior Department. The same item appeared in different forms in other papers, and then the flood of letters began. The last one re-ceived was from the German Consul General at New York. It is said, authoritatively, that Secretary Schurz has no knowledge of or connection with the estate, either personally or officially.-[Washington Star.

Leg of Pork-Run the knife around the bone until it is loosened, take out the bone and fill the place with a rich stuffing made of stale bread, seasoned with butter, pepper, salt and onion; take a few stitches to vent the stuffing from coming out; put it on the spit and baste it with fresh butter (it is more delicate than lard). Fresh pork requires longer cooking than any other meat. Serve with Irish potatoes, cut in quarters and fried. It will take from three to four hours to cook, according to size.—
